Do YOU have QUESTIONS?

Job interviews go both ways, but it can be hard to come up with questions for your interviewer on the spot. The questions below cover many of the things you might want to know before accepting a new job. Take a look before your interview, and you'll be ready when you hear "Now, do you have any questions for me?"

Caseload Numbers

What are the total number of students served?

How many students would I case manage?

What would happen if numbers get too high and aren't manageable?

What would happen if the numbers just end up being different than what was expected?

Who would I talk to/problem solve with?

Tell me about the special education referral process at the building (especially if it's an elementary). Is there a process for RTI services? Is there a referral team?

Communication

If the district is hiring for a new service model (remote, teletherapy, hybrid) advance communication will be key. Who would inform the school principal and sped team about the service model?

School Buildings

What schools would I be working at?

How many students or sections per grade?

Is there anything helpful for me to know about the school population (non-native English speakers, free and reduced lunch, military families, etc.)

Mentorship & Support

Would there be a mentor or point person from within the district for questions or support?

Would there be another SLP sharing this caseload?

How many other SLPs are in the district?

Are there job-alike or special ed department meetings?

Your Assisstant

Would there be an SLP-A, speech aide or paraprofessional?

Are they already hired?

What is their experience?

What would be my supervisory role with this person?

What would happen when they are absent?
